ABOUT RESEARCH :

Most modern medical treatments are emerged from the result of clinical research. The research test whether particular treatments are safe and effective in patients after conducting clinical trials. Clinical trials are essential for the development of new medical treatments and diagnostic tests. Without clinical trials, we cannot properly determine whether new treatments developed using animal models are effective or safe or whether a diagnostic test may work properly. Advanced treatments for all life threatening diseases including cancer, heart disease, asthma etc have been developed through clinical research. Clinical trials also help to improve health care services by raising standards of treatment. Researchers conducting clinical trials can be part of hospitals, pharmaceutical, medical device and biotechnology companies, or a combination of these. These all members involved in clinical trials are continually trained to provide best practice patient care.
